- Upon yon soldier's faded coat?
 His hand is hard and rough and brown,
 I see a scar a'ong his throat.
 His eyes seem looking far off still,
 His close shut mouth is grim.
 "Mother what means that little word,
 Upon a sleeve so worn and dim?"
- It means, my child, that rugged hand
 Has wielded musket long and well;
 Has sent the iron thunder home,
 And tuned the seng of screeching shell.
 It means—that steady, staunch and true
 He fairly won that ragged scar,
 While you and I sat safe at home,
 And read the news about the war.
- What wonder if the mouth is grim,
- What wonder if the mouth is grim,
 That said so many swift "good bye's;"
 Life's common words are idle breath,
 Beside those eargest battle cries.
 What wond er if the gaze is dim,
 And yonder stranger lingers yet—
 The eye that has looked straight at Death,
 His image way not soon forget.
- And this is what it means, to earn The title "veteran," on a coat:
 To march through flood and field, or lie
 Where rebel rifles sweep the moat;
- To serve the guns in rifle pits;
 To sleep beneath the silent sky;
 To dream of home and wake to war;
- To see a comrade drop and die.
- To bear and heed the fearful song,
 Which whistling Minnie bullets sing;
 To faint and fall, and longing lie
 For one cold draught from rocky spring;
 And this my child, is what it says,
 That little word of letters three;
 Go clasp his hand and give him thanks,
 For battles fought for you and me.

A Singular Exhibition in London. A new exhibition in London, called the "Anhropoglossos," is thus described by the Times.
The room in St. James's Hall, long enlivened y Christy's Minstrels is now devoted to a ingular exhibition, bearing for its title the dd word, Anthropoglossos. Entering the com the spectator finds his attention attracted by a large waxen head, bearing no slight resemblance to the late M. Jullien, with something like a silver funnel stuck into its mouth. This head does not stand on a pedestal, but is sustained by gilded chains suspended from the ceiling. At the first glance it might be taken for a very idealized "A unt Sally," but on closer inspection the spectator will perceive below the bust a small glass case containing some sort of mechanical apparatus. To an aperture in this case the exhibitor applies a key, and after a winding-up process has been duly accomplished, a pair of little bellows are seen to work, and the sound of a human voice, singing the muste and words of a song quite so discount of the muste and words of a song quite so discount of the muste and words of a song quite so discount of the muste and words of a song quite so discount of the muste and words of a song quite so discount of the muste and words of a song quite so discount of the muste and words of a song quite so discount of the muste and words of a song quite so discount of the muste and words of a song quite so discount of the sound of the soun ing the music and words of a song, quite as distinctly as any flesh and blood vocalists, issues from the mouth of the head. Six songs, terminating with "God save the Queen," constitute the entire entertainment. Two other heads, likewise with funnels in their mouths, may be observed at the back of the room, but these are not yet brought into active operation. When their musical education is complete we may possibly be favored with duets and trios. "It we remember right it was Alexander the Great who played the lyre with such wondertul skill as to elicit from his father the remark that the performance was too good for the future king. In the same manner, notwithstanding the assurance that the loss of "Polly Perkins" and the fascination of the "dark girl dressed in blue," are celebrated "by means of the nicest and most exquisitely constructed mechanism," we cannot help remarking that metallic, or squeaky or hitchy, in the whole performance, but the lyric effusions go off as glibly as though some artist of the Music Halls were singing them through one of those pipes that form a communication between the principally are leading to the state of th pal's parlor and the clerk's room in a merchant's counting house. Hence we fear wicked Pyrrhonists will arise who will doubt the connection between the winding-up of the machine and the utterance of the melodies. Of course they will be altogether wrong, but the presence of a voice decidedly human would have incalculably increased the facility of refuting them.

"However, the skeptic and the believer will both agree that the exhibition is extremely ingenious. The head is not large enough to contain any human performer, nor does it communicate in any visible manner with any remote source of sound. There it hangs in chains, in a state of defiant insulation, and if you will not believe that its voice proceeds from the little bellows, it challenges you to point out an-

the articulation is almost too unexceptionable for a machine. There is nothing wooden or other origin. "To most persons of the present generation the "Anthropoglossos" will, we think, be an absolute novelty, but the old among us will, perhaps, recollect that at a time when the name of Madame Tussaud was unknown in London there was, on the southern side of Fleet street, a collection of wax figures, ostensibly belonging to one Mrs. Salmon. In one of the rooms of the edifice that contained this collection was the so-called "Invisible Girl;" a small suspended box, from which issued a voice that answered questions and sang songs. Whether the old "Invisible Girl" was similar in principle to the "Anthropoglossos"

An English mechanic has invented a cooking range with some new features. The upper bar of the fire-grate is increased in breadth, and placed in an angular position, so as to direct the air downwards upon the fire, thereby producing more perfect combustion. The increased heat, instead of being carried up the flues or chimney, which is the case where there is a close door in front of the fire, is thrown outwards, by which simple arrangement a strong roasting fire is obtained, and at the same time the oven, boiler, and hob-plate are heated in a superior manner. A 10-inch fire is said to be capable of roasting a joint of meat, and a 12-inch fire of roasting two oints. It is also found that the fire bars last longer than usual, one or two sets, which have been in constant use for upwards of five years, being still almost as perfect as when first applied. The effects produced by this very simple change of form are certainly worth inquiring into.

FEMALE COMPOSITORS .- The Council Bluffs Nonpareil announces that having been deserted by the printer boys, who have "gone to the wars," it has "enlisted" about half a dozen of the best looking girls in town, and is now "training up" a corps of compositors not sub-ject to the draft. The jubilant editor adds: Come on, now, with your "calls" and your "conscription," Father Abraham, we are ready for you; take all the soldiers you want, only leave us our pressman. And ye, peregrinating printers of the masculine persuasion, don't come this way; we want none of you; every case is taken; we have all the force we need Blessed be crinoline! Verily was the head of the great showman level when he uttered, as by inspiration, his immortal toast: "Femail woman, you are a good egg!"-Multum in hoops! A SPIDER CAPTURES A SNAKE.—The Orleans

(N.Y.) Republican says Hon. Lorenzo Burrows discovered, one day last week, in an unoccupied store of his at Albion, a snake one foot in height in the coil of a spider's web. The snake had been drawn up from the floor about half his height, and the little spider was above working the tackle by which he intended to wholly suspend him, and that by the neck, where he had coiled his web. The snake struggled in vain to escape, and was only released by the carelessness of a man who went to see the contest, which was witnessed by hundreds of people during the day.
